Reflection

Setting up and conducting this interview was a learning experience. It taught me the importance of making the interviewee feel comfortable and engaged. Listening carefully and asking follow-up questions is critical to getting valuable insights. Next time, I'll use more open-ended questions to encourage more profound responses. I might also consider using visuals to spark more discussion. This experience showed me that being well-prepared and flexible is essential for finding design opportunities through interviews. I don't need to change anything with what I did this time.
